

DesignMeets is about bringing together Canadian designers from all walks of life.

The meet-ups are about interdisciplinary collaboration and building a stronger, more connected Canadian design community.

At Pivot we are working to coordinate opportunities where design professionals from all disciplines and walks of life can meet and mingle at local events with an organization we created called DesignMeets. Our aim for each mixer event is to gather speakers from a broad range of design disciplines so that the audience is diverse and can benefit from hearing varying perspectives on a common theme.

Beginning in November of 2010, we've organized a design mixer every few months in various cities each with an attendance of 75-100 local designers from various fields (graphic, industrial, ux, interior design, architecture and landscape architecture).

Recaps and videos for past events can be found on designmeets.ca

Each event boasts 3-5 speakers from the local design community and a trendy design theme for the event.

The format of the talks is generally very casual and goes like this: 5-ideas and 5-images in 5ish-minutes. The idea is that we want to mix it up and allow different people to share their perspectives on a theme. This way we can get conversations started and spark some collaboration among designers who might not normally meet and mingle with each other.
